

Powell is full of it. Further deregulation of media ownership rules will only harm the general public and put more control and money in the hands and pockets of the handful of large corporations already dominating media ownership. The FCC, like the rest of the federal government, has turned its back on its true mission: to protect the access of the general public to as much real information as possible. The current proceedings are a sham, with leadership deeply into the pockets of corporate owners.